3. This two-hour forum consisted of a walk-and-talk tour of the Fairfield Association, led by Ian Proctor.

The tour began at the Association's impressive tool shed; it continued to the Nature Reserve (52 acres), where we heard of various educational activities with primary school children at the Stump Circle, admired the Willow Tunnel, and passed through the Orchard, where we saw lush apple trees indigenous to the area loaded with fruit, cared for by Keith Taylor and volunteers; the grass is cut by David Elliott. There are also pear and medlar trees and soft fruit shrubs. This is a popular area for dog-walking, as we saw first-hand. Continuing through the Nature Reserve we saw plantings designed to support birds in the winter and wildflower strips for insects, learned of collaboration with a local farmer to combine such plantings with crops and heard of a reed bed (just out of sight and not open to the public) to further nurture insects and frogs, and of other wildlife in the area (hares, rabbits, foxes, and deer). We saw hedge plantings, bird and bat boxes, and a hay meadow. We enjoyed some beautiful views and met some cattle, including a rather feisty bull. The tour continued to the Triangle, where Dave Brookes gave us a history of this pocket park, once a hangout for drug users, now featuring raised beds growing fruit and herbs, impressive carved sculptures, and a shed that hosts local art exhibits. The tour ended at the Children's Playground, where the Fairfield Association began to save it from developers.
